

Tampa CHANGING

"I re-photograph historical photos that show a building that still exists... and then superimpose the two on top of each other, [allowing] people to see how much the original scene has stayed the same and how much has changed."

Bryan Weinstein, a civil engineer with a passion for history and a talent for photography, has translated his interests into a fascinating Web project, TampaChanging.com, that vividly shows how our urban landscape has evolved over the years. But he doesn't want this just to be about his own photographs; he's hoping to inspire a citywide collaboration, and invites anyone interested to contact him about researching and rephotographing local properties on their own. "It's important because you need to have people be more aware of the history," he says. "If they're not aware of it, we're going to lose it."

continued on page 12 ➔